Trager® as Treatment. My history prior to Milton
In 1979 I received sessions and took classes from Arthur Lincoln Pauls DO, in Orthobionomy. In 1981 on Orcas Island, I received training in Therapeutic Touch with MDs and nurses and worked weekly with seriously ill patients for 3 years. I also trained as a volunteer in Emergency Medicine and helped with dying and severely injured patients and also did Hospice work and Kidney dialysis during those years. All of these trainings and experiences were focused on life saving and other therapeutic outcomes. I had my first Trager session in 1985 and completed my practitionership in that year. I became a licensed bodyworker 3 months later. My work with clients using Trager® was always focused on therapeutic outcomes. I started working insurance clients as I was developing my Side Lying techniques, so I had to submit accurate records of those sessions and their outcomes. I also learned Reiki which was enhanecd by my years of using Therapeutic Touch. When I became a Reiki master in 1993, my first students were 8 of my Trager® colleagues.

Our Presencing Motto: As we attend more to the sensations arising from within our own bodies, a new essence starts to companion us from within. We start to experience presence as the arising of each moment, as a taste of eternal awareness. All living systems are attuned to NOW. Every event; past, present, and future is a part of this eternal moment. This growing awareness of NOW seems to put many things, especially fearful ones, into different perspectives. The body is temporal. If we pay close attention, we realize that the body only exists now. So that which is implicitly temporal may lead us to experience that which is explicitly eternal!

Reminder from Jack: All webinar attendees receive a class manual, NCBTMB certified CEs, and video copies of each class session. I offer a range of classes which I hope will enhance your practice and help with your CEs. My Blessings to all touch practitioners everywhere in these difficult times!**

From Jack: Over 40 years, having given thousands of sessions, I realize that side-lying offers so many advantages that it could arguably be used in every session, not only in Trager but in every modality. Here are some of the advantages that I found:

*Most clients, when properly bolstered, are more comfortable and less resistant when lying on their sides.
*Clients who have been abused usually feel much safer, less vulnerable in the semi-fetal position that side-lying offers.
*Gravity can be used to great advantage because of the way it loads the joints and muscle tissue, hips, shoulders, abdomen.
*The therapist benefits from all the positioning advantages and thus doesn't have to work so hard.
*There is comparatively little body surface in contact with the table so one can introduce movement with very little effort. Like a pendulum, the further away a body part is from the table the easier it is to keep in motion.
*The shoulder girdle and hip that is not on the table can be decompressed and tension in the joint released non-reflexively with the help of gravity.
*Small amounts of motion can be transmitted through the joints with very little effort and very pleasurable effect to the client.
*The body in a side-lying position is similar to a piano keyboard with various body parts readily accessible at the same time.
*The body in the sagittal plane is asymmetrical from back to front so you can take advantage of the different way the body moves. For instance, the pelvis and shoulder uppermost move independently of the torso. When any one is put into motion a gentle and freeing torque is created along the spine.

Why Somatics? When the conscious mind starts to pay attention to the full language of the body, things change. This is the basis of all somatic approaches. Until then the mind only pays attention to what it likes and tries to eliminate what it doesn't. Ordinarily we pay attention to the autonomic; sympathetic and parasympathetic impulses when they engage or soften. Part of the role of the somatics practitioner is to help the client pay a different kind of attention to the body than preferences, demands, and avoidances. As we attend to our clients in these ways, we also start to change. Our senses are heightened. We become aware of different kinds of information that guide us in our work and our lives. As we help our clients discover the connections between their conscious and unconscious minds through the simple tool of presence, we too become aware of those connections. By so doing, we and our clients, get to partake of the Mind of the Designer.

PRESENCING PAIN; Entering the GIFT of PAIN

The Gateless Gate: In touching pain we are turning our direction towards rather than away from pain. As practitioners we are approaching pain with respect and deference. I started this writing by saying that caregiving professionals are expected to remove or reduce our clients' pain. Most of our methods do not directly address the unconscious associations that clients often make with pain. Relieving our clients' pains does not resolve hidden issues like fear, guilt, and punishment. Also, suppressing or removing the client's pain does not necessarily alert the client to activities that created the pain. Those are physical or mental activities that happen away from the sessions. It is frustrating for all care givers to realize that our clients have various situations in their lives that perpetuate much of their suffering. While it is tempting, within our scope of practice, to help our clients address those situations, we are limited ethically from doing so… And yet watch how quickly the practitioner is blamed and rejected if she cannot be successfully end her client's suffering.
Odysseus - Riddle of the Sphinx

Here is a different scenario. The client and practitioner form a team to mutually explore sources of pain. The client is using proprioceptive and somatic awareness to interact directly with painful parts of her body from inside. At same time the practitioner is using her palpation skills to interact with and monitor the client's painful body parts from outside. They are engaged tactilely through mutual touch. They are engaged verbally and consciously through their willingness to be interactive with one another in the area of pain. As such they are conjoined in the present moment. I cannot prove it just by my words, but I believe this mutual engagement is releasing both persons from their fear laden associations with pain. In that sense much of our accumulated mental conditioning is nullified when we share in presence. So the place we were least likely to go becomes a gateway into new territory. Together we are discarding the baggage of our past conditioning towards pain and starting to explore with newfound freedom; freedom to enter new levels of conscious awareness. Later in this series we will consider some case studies which point towards this direction.

Human Faces are Mirrors: We cannot see our own faces. So one of the primary functions of our faces is to mirror the faces of others – even as they are mirroring us… What we feel inside governs how we mirror others. Loving-open faces create the effect of being truly met. "Truly met" means that someone is greeting us as a fellow soul-being… When we wear a "mask," what the Greeks called persona, it means that we are playing a part or role in relation to others. Handsomeness and beauty are personas or roles, not mirrors of empathy.

Original Face Work: In Original Face Work, we are learning the feeling the feeling of relaxed, refreshed, and fearless facial musculature. We are clearing our musculature from past memories and projections. True beauty and ugliness have nothing to do with age… they reflect our ability to mirror others and our willingness to be mirrored back.

Gateways to Personal and Interpersonal Expression: Our eyes are called mirrors of the soul and can look deeply from our soul to another soul. The expression "Look into the eyes that really see you," is a deeper form of mirroring we support with Original Face Work. We are relaxing eye muscles and inner tension inside and behind the eyes. Many persons are afraid to make eye contact… Why? Also many persons are afraid to keep their eyes closed when entering their inner being… Why? What are the stages of letting go of eye-centered fear?

DECOMPRESSION SOMATICS INTRO;
Two Two Hour Classes, 4 CEs $100

Activating proprioceptive rather than neuromuscular responses: As with yoga we are teaching the client to interact with different body parts through proprioceptive and felt sense communication. Rather than asking clients to engage muscles we are encouraging them to join in with their proprioceptive awareness. 'So doing, we can mostly avoid triggering the neuromuscular system with its preset gamma sensory motor limits. This could be extremely beneficial for those persons whose neuromuscular systems have been partially compromised. It also sets up a parallel system for growth in somatic awareness. Perhaps the most surprising result of this kind of interaction is that clients can become involved is producing their own tissue responses. Clients can also feel their own reflexive releases and feeling linked-relationships (Anatomy Trains) to other parts of the body. This is effective and reinforcing because clients are learning to be their own healers.

Decompression Somatics as a shared meeting place: Probably the most difficult concept in DS is the concept of somatics... A state of conscious awareness, or shared presence, we are trying to produce for the client and achieve for ourselves. While DS relies upon presencing at the core, it also relies upon the willing participation of both parties. DS is called DS because somatics is the heart of our work. We are using a slightly different approach to somatics than other forms of bodywork. We are reversing the emphasis from teaching the client somatic awareness to directly recruiting the client into the teamwork of releasing (ego based) holding patterns. Thus we become equal participants with the client and visa versa. It works both ways because we have created a shared meeting place. The first step starts with bringing the client into that part of the body. The second step involves using interactive feeling tools like client breath and touch. The third step, and perhaps the most powerful, is to support the client's words to come forth or emerge directly from his/her felt experience. This search for words that convey the felt-sense (process borrowed from Focusing) induces a state of exploration and curiosity in the client. This state becomes an open doorway to the direct inner perception of the body. The client searches for words. Correspondingly, as the search proceeds, the client's tissue changes. The search for an exact verbal description spurs curiosity, the opposite of control and faking it (ego devices). The words have to fit or the tissue will not respond... Process; find the fit in an ever-changing domain of somatesthesia (somatic awareness).
